VOL. 14, NUMBER 20 MONESSEN, PA., WEDNESDAY, JULY 7, 1915 SIX CENTS THE WEEK

Rival Church Factions Are Again In Court

Tuesday morning Judge Charles D. Copeland of Greensburg, presided in court in which a large number of Monessen people were interested. For several years there has been a struggle between two factions of the Greek Catholic church for the possession of the property valued at about $50,000.

John Kicinko and 23 other members including Rev. Paul Ruttkay, members and pastor of the Greek Catholic church of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary congregation, represented by Attorneys Robbins & Wyant, the the plaintiffs, and John Petrusky and six other members, together with their pastor, Rev. V. Levkanich of the Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic St. Mary's church, represented by Attorneys Walkinshaw & Walkinshaw, are the defendants.

Shortly after Monessen became a borough in 1898, a number of people came to the town and organized the United Greek Catholic church, collected money and purchased three lots, Nos. 817, 819 and 821 Second street, where they erected a frame building. It is alleged that worship was continued in the building for some time and that the faith and form of worship was changed from the original church name to another name as the defendants selected.

Witnesses were called Tuesday morning who testified that the system of worship had not been changed while some of the church furniture had been displaced. The lawsuit had been up in court once before. This is the fourth day of the present hearing. The court room was filled with members of the two contesting parties and it will require some time before the legal point will be completed and finished.

Salary Reduction For Postmasters

Postmaster General Burleson made public the increases and decreases of postmasters' salaries in Pennsylvania and other states, the change in pay being based upon the amount of business transacted by each office during the fiscal year ended June 30, last. The new salaries were effective July 1.

An examination of the figures show that Western Pennsylvania offices were hardest hit by the readjustment. In the industrial centers such as Homestead, Sharon, Scottdale and similar towns, reductions range from $100 to $200 per year. In several instances, among them East Butler and Everson, the office is taken out of the presidential class and goes back to the fourth class, which carries no stated salary, the postmaster receiving his pay from the cancellation of letters, issuance of money orders, etc. In no Western Pennsylvania town is any office advanced from the fourth class to the presidential class. The salary of the Pittsburgh postmaster being fixed by Congress, the readjustment does not affect that office.

In thns political readjustment, Monessen was allowed to remain the same, and Postmaster Jeffries will not be effected, although many other towns in this county received cuts of from $100 to $400.

Will Play Two Games This Week

Enthused by their victories over the Charleroi Independents, the locals are going after the stronger teams and Friday of this week will meet the West Newton aggregation that has been claiming the championship of the county. This will be the first twilight game of the season, starting at 6 o'clock and allowing the mill men and business men plenty of time to get to the contest.

Saturday, Beltzhoover, the strongest team on the Independent circuit, will be the attraction and it will take Manager Vaughn's best team to even have a look in with this aggregation which has not met defeat this season and defeated the Page team on the local grounds several years ago. Already this season they have defeated the Monongahela team, the Cuban Giants and the Pittsburgh Collegians. The game will be called at 3:45 and it is probable that Stubby McCreight will be in the local's lineup. Next week the Independents will go to Greensburg and on Saturday will meet the Mt. Oliver team here.

William Laird Funeral Sunday

The funeral of William Laird which was held Sunday afternoon at the family home, was a particularly sad one on account of the unfortunate circumstances which ended the life of the young man. The sermon was preached by Rev. Swain, pastor of the Christian church and the services were very impressive.

The young man was a favorite in the household and was well liked by all of his associates and those who knew him. The body was carried to its last resting place by fellow workmen in the shop and the two companions that were with him when he met death carried the flowers.

The unexpected tragedy which befell William was a keen shock to the family and his host of friends. The household wishes to convey their keen appreciation of the many acts on the part of neighbors and friends and the boys of the blooming mill who worked with William.

Local Men Officials In Civic League

The Civic League of Westmoreland county met Monday in the K. of P. hall at Greensburg and elected the following officers: George H. Holley, Greensburg, president; Secretary, Alex Pangburn, Monessen; Treasurer, Robert Gaskins, Monessen. Delegates from Latrobe, Ruffsdale, Irwin, Mt. Pleasant, Scottdale and Monessen were present.

The call was issued by the president to further the advancement and protection of the negro rights and bring about a solid organization throughout the county. Some of the topics discussed included "Creation of a More Perfect Union" by William Taylor, "The Denouncing of People Claiming Membership in the Organization Under False Pretense" by W. Anderson, "The Necessity of Having our Men Register and Pay Their Taxes" by Prof. W. Spriggs and "The Observing of Authority in our Established Body" by Alex Pangburn.

The supporting of men for offices who are favorable to the colored race was thoroughly discussed by the members. It was moved by the body to meet in Monessen September 22 of this year to affiliate with the Afro-American Protection League of Monessen in convention. President G. Holly was urged to send a large delegation to the convention here.

Thomas Remains A Bull Moose

Still believeing in the principles of the Washington party, Goodloe H. Thomas has decided that he will remain with his old love and he has placed a "w" opposite his name on the registry list.

Evidently Mr. Thomas is of the opinion that it is better to go it alone than to travel with a bunch of crooks that compose the Republican party, and not being in harmony with those of his faith who believe that the party has served its purpose, he could not go over to the Republican fold. It is better to travel alone for a cause even though you lose than to travel with a crowd because of number. We congratulate Mr. Thomas and while we can't see that he will win very soon, yet assurance is doubly sure that he will be in good company.

Midnight Blaze Cause Of Embarrassment

Daniel Reamer is looking for the fellow who exploded a fire cracker and set his house on fire Monday night about 1 o'clock in a violent burst of patriotism.

Mr. Reamer was aroused from his slumbers by the ringing of a bell and a voice that yelled "fire." Thinking he was being visited by a nightmare, Mr. Reamer sat upright in bed, when the shrill voice again startled him, and this time Mr. Reamer went to the window and the man outside yelled "fire." Mr. Reamer then said "where?" "Why your house is on fire, get on the roof quickly or it will be gone."

Without further explanation and without even attempting to attire himself in his Fourth of July costume, but robed in a neat fitting night shirt, Mr. Reamer climbed out on the roof to discover that a hole as large as a good sized serving tray was burned through the shingles. Mr. Reamer stamped around for a time trying to beat the fire out with his hands, but it was then getting too good a start, and he had to summon water and without the aid of assistance, the fire was soon extinguished.

Standing upon the roof of a building as this hour of night in a costume of this character, was a thing very unusual along this thoroughfare just at the time when a lot of people were returning from the down town sections. Of course the object attracted some attention and first two or three stopped, then others came along and paused and finally Mr. Reamer became too much embarrassed to either climb down or speak and it was quite a while before the silence was broken. When it became known that one member of the party had been dispatched across the street to the home of Chief Whealey to have the officer summoned to make an investigation, Mr. Reamer decided he must get away from there some way and without making any explanation, he darted down through the hole that had been burned in the roof and crawled back in bed. The folks who saw the object on the roof dreamed of ghosts all night and were not enlightened until they saw the hole in the roof the next day.

Two Prisoners

Monsen Williams was found in a drunken condition last night by the police and was given a hearing before the burgess. He was discharged on account of it being his first offense.

H. F. Smith reappeared on the same charge and was fined $2.00 and costs of two days to jail. He took the latter on account of being short the $4.00.

BASE BALL

The Mohawks defeated Charleroi Saturday at Page park by the score of 2 to 1 in eleven innings. Gibson twirled for the locals, while Mullen was on the receiving end. Wagner was on the rubber for the visitors and pitched a fine game, having 15 strikeouts.

Mullen was the batting star of the day, having a home run, scoring the first run and driving in the winning run with a single.

The Mohawks traveled to Donora on Monday and defeated the strong St. Charles school team by a score of 5-4 in a good game. They were to play two games, but the Donora first team wanted the ground. The second game was postponed. Gibson again twirled, while Sherry was on the receiving end for the Monessen lads.

Officers Raid Carnival Gamblers

Corporal Mack, of the state police, and County Detective A. C. Remaley, made a raid on the Barkoot Carnival company, at Wireton, Friday evening and captured four persons who are charged with "running a wheel," contrary to the laws of Pennsylvania. The accused men are Harry and Willian Miller, John Oldman and Harry Page. Complaint reached the district attorney's office Friday morning that gambling was being conducted in connection with the show, and the two officers were detailed to hunt down the wrongdoers. The men were given a hearing before Squire J.A.Watkins, at Monessen, and in default of $300 bail they were committed to the county prison.

ODD BITS OF NEWS

Pueblo, Colo.—A nail factory in this city makes the largest and smallest nails in the world. The 3 16 brads require 30,500 to the pound, and half a million are cut a minute. The 12 by 3-8 inch spike, used in bridge building, weigh three to the pound, and are made at the rate of 200 to the minute.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Dr. Otto Henry Rhode of Brooklyn, in his paper on "Canteens," read at the convention of the Medico Pharmaceutical League, said that beers and light wines are active aids to the system as well as food and drink, and that the women and children of the United States are injuring their health by the inordinate use of soft drinks procured at soda fountains.

Farmington, Me.—Twenty two years ago, Fred Butterfield gave a diamond ring to Ida M. Adams to bind their engagement. Miss Adams lost the ring in a log cabin in the woods. The couple married and died. and the ring was found the other day buried in a decayed log.

Humbolt, Kas.—Fred Norton was drowned in the Neosho river by the upsetting of a boat. That night Mrs. J. H. Shields dreamed she saw the body. The following morning she went a mile down the river and found it hanging to a cable which extended in to the river.

Milwaukee, Wis.—When chiropractors adjusted two vertebrae in the neck of Frank Van Wie, whose mind has been blank for two years, he awoke to find himself married and in the home of his wife. He had lost his mind following an injury, and had wandered, without knowing what he was doing, until cured.

Wisdom, Ment.—M. M. McGregor of Plains, has a crab apple tree which produces rose blossoms. No apple forms where the roses have bloomed. A white rose bush was planted last year ten feet from the tree, and it is believed the root grafted itself onto the tree root.

Liberty Bell Will Be Here Tonight

The Suffrage bell is due to arrive here this evening and will land at Fourth and Donner where speeches will be made in the interest of woman suffrage. The bell is now on its tour of the State for the suffrage amendement so that it may proclaim liberty and justice for women of Pennsylvania on November 2.

The motor truck bearing the bell will reach here about 7 p. m. o'clock. The local suffragists have arranged a big public mass meeting and demonstration at that time to welcome the bell. This will give all the people of Monessen a chance to see this exact replica of the Bell that proclaimed "Liberty Throughout the Land," at least so far as men are concerned, in 1776.

The corps of eloquent suffragists who accompany the bell on its tour will make stirring addresses at the will also take a prominent part in the mass meeting. The local suffragists exercises.

A delegation of suffragists in automobiles will meet the Bell and its party at the Allegheny county line and will escort it through Washington county. At the Washington county line, a Greene county guard of honor will meet the Bell.

The Woman's Liberty Bell is a duplicate of "Old Liberty" in every way. It is made of 2,000 pounds of the finest bronze and is cast in the exact size and shape of the original Bell. The only way in which it can be told from the national relic that is now on its way to the San Francisco Fair is by the fact that it is not cracked, and that a special motto for the woman's cause, "Establish Justice" has been inscribed on it in addition to its famous motto "Proclaim Liberty Throughout the Land to all the Inhabitants Thereof."

But until the women of Pennsylvania are given the vote, their Bell will never sound a stroke. Its huge bronze clapper will be held silent until they are given the just rights of their citizenship. The women hope that the Bell will sound on November 2.

WHO PAYS?

TODAY and TOMORROW

by EDWIN BLISS

(Copyright, 1915, by Pathe Exchange, Inc. All Moving Picture Rights and all Foreign Copyrights Strictly Reserved.)

Nervously looking about him he saw the men slacking in their labors.

He hustled toward the mess shack Something must be done but for the life of him he could not imagine what it would be. Supper was what the men wanted and supper was what they intended having. He had sent his superintendent, the man he trusted sufficiently not only to put his business in his hands, but also the happiness of his daughter. And his superintendent had failed.

He joined Pat Grady in the mess hall. Silently the two men looked about them. Tables, chairs, crockery, food remained as it had been after the mutiny at the dinner table. Even the stench of the mess still hovered over the hall. He threw out his hands in a wide gesture of rage and helplessness.

"Hell t' pay and then some," muttered the foreman.

Monroe started a nod but checked it, throwing up his head like a runaway horse as the shrill scream of the whistle pierced his ears.

Loud, shrieking, fiendish was the sound. He had not know what it might mean. There was no way of telling that. Of consequences he cared little compared to the broken promise to his men. Already they were rushing toward this very place. And he had promised that they would find the food there which they were entitled to, instead of which—this mess.

Before he had time to even talk the situation over, to reach any conclusion, a burly form hurtled in the doorway, followed by another, another, and then another. Monroe met the startled, incredulous eyes of the workmen. Then he lowered his own.

"Well, I'm damn—"

He lifted his head quickly at the threat in the angry voice. If the men were in this mood already, then, under full headway, there was no telling to what extent their rage would take them. He lifted his hand, his powerful shoulders lunged forward.

"Men, I'm sorry," he said, simply. "You know I sent the superintendent to town to remedy this condition. I'm going to the phone now and see what can be done."

The growl that went up showed that his declaration had far from mollified. He flushed darkly, his iron jaw creeping out.

"It's the first time I've ever had to apologize to you men," he snapped. "I'm going to do my best for you now. I said I'm sorry and I'll phone the city immediately. Now, you can take it or get your time. That's all."

Without a side glance he shouldered his way through and stamped angrily into the office, snatching the receiver from the hook. Swiftly he clicked, his powerful finger gripping and ungripping over the little bit of iron that spelled so much to him. A step sounded from the door. He turned to meet the eyes of his foreman, then shrugged his shoulders.

"The phone won't work," he announced, slowly putting the receiver back in place.

Pat Grady did not answer. For just a moment the two men stared at one another. Then Grady quietly put his shoulder against a big cupboard at one side the room and hauled it before the window, so that just a mere slant of light showed through.

"Bolt the door double, boss," he said softly. "The devil's in those men at the best. But he's got so much room to locate in their stomachs this day, I'm thinking we'll have a bit of a scrimmage."

Monroe stared at him irresolutely a second, then moved decisively to the door. Outside the men waited eagerly, their brows still lowering, their faces dark and sullen, yet expectant.

"Men," cried the oil king, a slight tremor in his voice despite the effort made at control, "I've just tried the phone and it's out of or—"

A hoarse laugh that had nothing of mirth in it halted him. Then he leaped back into the office, hurriedly tossing the bolts into place, as the laugh grew into a roar, a roar of such menace as even he had never heard before. A roar and then a wild, insane rush forward.

Came the crack of a revolver. He shuddered at the sound. Never before had he heard the sound of a gun in fields within his dominion. He looked around to see Pat Grady, chuckling silently to himself, as he squinted through the aperture beside the cupboard which concealed the window, his right hand firmly gripping the revolver he had found in Payne's room—Payne, whose delinquence was the cause of all this.

IV.

Brown Joe laughed aloud as he stuck the pliers in the waistband of his trousers and clambered laboriously down the telegraph pole. Above him dangled the wires to the city, the wires along which the message of Monroe was futilely seeking way.

He had seen his opportunity for revenge when, peering furtively through the mess hall window he saw there was no chance for the promised supper.

Quick thinking had it been that led him to the phone wires, thinking inspired within his cunning brain by the master of evil himself. And now he would go back and complete the work.

As he rushed toward the group about the office door he caught the laugh that greeted Monroe's announcement of his inability to get Los Angeles on the wire. He knew that laugh might be turned in either direction. He took it up instantly, a wild yell of hatred and defiance bursting from his throat. He grinned to himself as the workmen caught that yell up and lunged toward the man who seemed mocking them.

Then he whirled back, staggering slightly, but quickly righting himself from the blow that had tossed him round lightly. He pressed his hands to the place where the blow had fallen, staring at them in astonishment as they came away, a red sticky smear upon them.

And then the rage that he had so cunningly controlled leaped up and overwhelmed him. He had been shot, had been shot by the same man who had knocked him down and then discharged him from the place without even giving him opportunity to get his pay check. And for what? Because he refused longer to tolerate the vile food that was served him.

With little whimpers of anger shrilling from his brawny throat, more like an animal of the African jungle than human being was he as he gathered the men together behind the mess hall, planning with them how to capture the office and take revenge upon the pair within.

"Two men—and a gun, boys," he declaimed shrilly. "Let 'em use up that bunch of cartridges and they won't amount to two whoops. Draw their fire while —"

He did not finish, turning and ducking the leaden messenger which was sent from the office toward him. In a few moments he reappeared with a rifle, waving it triumphantly above his head, exultantly shrilling a defiance toward the two in command.

In command no longer. For two men and a gun had been offset by this crowd and a rifle.

Quickly Brown Joe made out from where the fire came, carefully plugging away at the aperture, disturbing and at the same time drawing the fire of Grady. And always did his lips move in careful count, a slow smile distorting his face evilly as he realized the supply of bullets must be getting low.

"There's a big timber round the other side of the shack," he suggested. "His fire is getting weak now. Get that timber and make a rush at the door. I'll keep his aim wild with the rifle."

Without a hint of disobedience they fell into the suggestion. Mobilke they had been led into this affair and now all the wild, unthinking, ungovernable impulse of mob spirit was upon them.

Swiftly Grady discharged his revolver in their midst. One man fell and they stared at him wonderingly, brutishly pained that such a thing should happen. Brown Joe saw the hesitancy and let out a wild whoop of exultation.

"I got him—winged him—"

"You're a dirty, brown liar," thundered back Grady from the cabin.

But his retort was drowned by the cheer from the mob, as they picked up the log again and lunged toward the office door.

"Short jabs, boys," yelled the leader, punctuating his howl by a rifle shot.

Manfully they stood to their work, ramming, ramming against the door. It was sagging at the upper corner now, sagging heavily.

And then, even as they exulted, it slapped back into place, re-enforced from inside.

Easily as a mob is encouraged, it becomes discouraged quite as readily. They dropped the log and stared at one another, then fell back to Brown Joe for advice. He started to speak, then started toward the rear window of the office, a howl of execration and triumph coming from his lips.

Snatching a lantern and followed by a few of his fellows, he darted out into the open, after the swift moving shadowy outlines of a man who had lunged through that window. He was able to make out the outlines finally, as he drew closer to the fleeing man.

It was Grady—Pat Grady, the man who had knocked him down and winged him in the same day. Rage gave wings to his feet. He was gaining, gaining upon the man. He started to yell, then clamped his lips shut, realizing it would require all his strength to catch up.

Almost upon him, something slipped from beneath his feet. Wild at the thought of losing, he hurled the lantern at Grady's head. The foreman ducked and the red-eyed thing crashed to the ground.

Brown Joe recovered his balance and started again in pursuit, then halted.

For, from beneath his very feet, a long sliver of flame was reaching, a beautiful little trickling stream of yellow light over which clung an acrid, black plume of smoke. It reached out eagerly, devouringly and the man leaped back, staring aghast at the fire monster, creeping, insidously yet remorselessly toward the tank from which the treacherous oil had leaked.

V.

After the theater Payne left Julia and spent a restless night. Next morning he was at the grocery store early to make the selections of food, and was on his way back when he met the messenger with the news that the oil refinery was besieged and burning and that the old boss was fighting off the hordes alone. Payne aroused the sheriff and, loading his car with deputies, rushed off, only to arrive too late. Ira Monroe was rescued, 'tis true, but only after his entire plant had been destroyed by fire.

Yesterday he had been rich; today, now, he was a poor man. His life had been devoted to these fields that were now but signs of what devastation can be caused by the thing which man had harnessed.

Triumphing in its freedom, exulting, wild clamored the fire. And still he stood and stared at the ruin of everything he had held dear. He turned to his daughter and his eyes fell upon Payne, who hung his head, unable to meet again those eyes.

"Well," he laughed, harshly, 'I trusted you, Lee Payne. I always trusted you. And my reward—is this—" He waved his hand in a wide gesture toward the terribly beautiful sight.

"You may go now. I suppose you will wish to go now, you have done—your worst—"

Julia sprang forward, her arms affectionately about the broken old man's neck. But he made no response. As well might he have been dead for all sign of response he gave.

"You May Go Now, You Have Done Your Worst!"

"Oh, dad, I did it—it was my fault—"

"I trusted you," Ira Monroe repeated as Payne would have opened his lips to spare her.

Gently but firmly the old man reached up and disentangled her arms from about him, slowly moving toward the waiting motor car, wherein the deputies were already piling, after scattering the rioters.

Julia turned toward her sweetheart, her hands outstretched in appeal, the agony of worlds upon her face.

"And I did it—I did it, Lee. And I only wanted to be with you because—I loved you so much. But I did it all—and now—"

"He trusted me—for this—" the superintendent answered slowly, the words falling dully from his lips.

"Lee—Lee," she clung to him desperately. "Say you forgive me—that you understand why—"

"He—trusted—me—for—this—"

Slowly, heavily he turned. She reached out her arms toward him, but he did not turn, did not even turn when the black smoke swallowed up his form from her sight.

Blinded she looked upon the havoc. She could never see again for the memory of this mass of fire and smoke. But always could she hear—always would she hear that merciless sound—the tick-tock, tick-tock of a watch to which she gave heed, too late.

Was Living High

Boston, Mass., July 5—That the ways to literary fame are still rough and stormy, as in the days of Milton and his "Paradise Lost" is the opinion of Alfred Noyes, the English poet, who was arrested at Harvard last week after delivering the Phi Beta Kappa poem to the great scholars of the east, in a civil suit brought by a woman manager of a lecture bureau. The papers in the case were returned last Saturday and it is expected that some adjustment of the case will be announced.

Mrs. Alexina C. Barrell, the woman who brought the suit, says she took action because she believed the poet had not treated her just right. She declared Noyes had come to Boston "helpless as a babe in the woods" and added:

"I had to arrange social entertainments for him, have his baggage checked, arrange for his taxi across Boston, and have him taken to Wellesley and to various functions, often at my expense. In spite of this, Mr. Noyes did everything possible to exclude me.

"He came here from New York in an upper berth on a sleeper. I sent him back on the boat, with a stateroooom, at my own expense. Long before he came, I had made elaborate arrangements for his lectures. I secured engagements for him that crowded out other distinguished persons. The amount for which I am suing, $1,600, will never recompense me for my services to Mr. and Mrs Noyes. I am prosecuting him as a matter of principle."

The arrest of the poet has created a sensation. There was nothing spectacular about the arrest, but it shocked those who had listened to the learned poem the Englishman delivered to learn that the poet had been arrested as he left Sanders theatre.

Visiting In California

The Petaluma, Argus, Petaluma, Sonoma county, California, has the following to say:

"Mrs. Harry Rinehart and daughter, Miss Virginia, of Monessen, Pennsylvania, have arrived here and are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. G. Swyer at their pretty home west of this city, where they will remain until next week. This is their first visit in California and they are well pleased with what they have thus far seen of it. They have spent a week at the Exposition and also have visited Mr. and Mrs. Archie Bathurst at Bellevue. On leaving here they will go south to visit relatives and they may visit the San Diego Exposition before returning east. Their presence is a source of great pleasure to Mr. and Mrs. Swyers."

Good Music For K. of M. Picnic

One of the pleasant attractions announced for the third annual outing and field day of the Knights of Malta of Western Pennsylvania, to be held at Kennywood park, on Saturday, July 24, will be a series of fine concerts, to be given throughout the day by five well known Malta bands of this section. This feature is expected to attract large crowds to the band stand at all times during the day.

This outing will be held under the auspices of the Field Day Association of Western Pennsylvania, and the proceeds will be devoted to the interests of the Malta Home and Hospital Association, which has secured a beautiful tract of land near Lewiston, Pa., and has already started the erection of buildings.

The five Malta bands already engaged to give concerts include the Homewood band of Homewood; L'Isle Adam band of New Kensington; Pittsburgh Commandery band of Pittsburgh; the Third Regiment band of Pittsburgh, and the Malta band of McKeesport.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (cause by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.
